ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-FOURTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was recruited in the counties of Schuylkill, Berks, Luzerne, Lycoming, Montour, Dauphin, Mifflin, Cambria, Bedford, and York, and was organized at Camp Curtin, on the 22d of July, 1864, with the following field officers: James Nagle, Colonel; Richard M'Michael, Lieutenant Colonel; Oscar D. Jenkins, Major. On the day of its organization, it moved for Baltimore, and upon its arrival, went into camp at Mankin's Woods. About the 1st of September, the regiment removed to Camp Carroll, a mile south-west of the city, on the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. Company K, which had been originally recruited for a cavalry company, soon after its arrival at Baltimore, was detached from the regiment, and stationed at the barracks, a half mile north-west of the Washington Monument. A few weeks later, this company was sent to the eastern shore of Maryland, where it remained, engaged in provost duty, until the close of its service. Companies C, G, H, and I, and parts of companies D, E, and F, were stationed at various points in the city for provost duty. Details from the remaining companies, to serve as escorts and guards to rebel prisoners on their way through the city to places of confinement, and for recruits destined for the front, were being constantly made, as long as the regiment remained in service. At the expiration of its term, the scattered detachments were called in, and it proceeded to Harrisburg, where, on the 6th of November, it was mustered out.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-FIFTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was principally recruited in Lancaster county, in July, 1864, to serve for a period of one hundred days. It was organized at Camp Curtin, on the 24th of July, with the following field officers: Joseph W. Fisher, Colonel; William L. Bear, Lieutenant Colonel; Oliver C. James, Major. On the day of its organization it proceeded to Baltimore, and after a halt of three days, moved on to Monocacy Junction, where, for a period of two months, it was engaged in guarding the bridge spanning the creek, and the lines of railway, and was thoroughly drilled and instructed—many of the officers and men having had no previous military training. On the 1st of October it proceeded to Berkley county, West Virginia, and was posted along the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, with headquarters at North Mountain Station, where it remained until the expiration of its term. In the meantime, three hundred of the men re-enlisted to serve for one year, and were, at the end of the original term, consolidated in three companies, remaining on duty under command of Captain Henry D. Markley, as a battalion of the One Hundred and Ninety-fifth. The balance of the regiment was mustered out at Harrisburg, on the 4th of November. In February, 1865, Colonel Fisher was authorized to recruit seven new companies, and re-organize the regiment for a term of one year. The re-organization was effected at Martinsburg, on the 16th of March. Henry D. Markley was made Major, in place of Major James—the only change in the field officers. Soon afterwards, three additional companies were attached to it, temporarily, and it was ordered to Charlestown, where it formed part of the command of General T. W. Egan. On the 1st of April, the regiment was sent out under command of Lieutenant Colonel Bear, to guard the fords of the Shenandoah River, with headquarters at Kabletown, returning to camp on the 4th, and moving on the following day to Stevenson's Station. On the 22d, it was ordered to duty at Berryville, the order declaring that this regiment had been selected for the delicate duty of preserving quiet in the midst of a hostile people, on account of its excellent reputation for good discipline, and proceeded thither, under command of Lieutenant Colonel Bear, Colonel Fisher being at this time in command of a brigade. On the 6th of June, the regiment, in conjunction with the One Hundred and Ninety-second, moved up the valley as far as Harrisonburg, three companies, under command of Major Markley, proceeding with the rest of the brigade as far as Staunton. While on the way, the three companies which had composed the veteran battalion, were, in pursuance of orders of the War Department, mustered out of service. On the 26th, the balance of the regiment assembled at Harrisonburg, and proceeded thence to Washington, arriving on the 1st of August. It was here employed in guarding government property, in which duty it continued until the 31st of January, 1866, when it was mustered out of service.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-SIXTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was recruited under the auspices of the Union League Association of Philadelphia, to serve for one hundred days, and was known as the Fifth Union League Regiment. It was organized at Camp Cadwalader, near the city, on the 20th of July, 1864, and a week later proceeded to Camp Bradford, at Mankin's Woods, near Baltimore. About the middle of August, it moved by rail to Chicago, Illinois, where it was employed in guarding Camp Douglass, in which was confined a large number of prisoners of war. On the 26th, company H was detached from the regiment and sent to Springfield, Illinois, where, until the expiration of its term of service, it performed provost duty. The regiment returned to Philadelphia, early in November, and upon its arrival, was ordered to temporary duty at Fort Delaware, whither it immediately proceeded. It was mustered out of service at Philadelphia, on the 17th of November, 1864.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was recruited at Philadelphia, and in neighboring counties, to serve for a period of one hundred days, by the assistance of the Coal Exchange Association of that city, and was known as the Third Coal Exchange Regiment. It was organized at Camp Cadwalader, on the 22d of July, 1864, with the following field officers: John R. Haslett, Colonel; Charles D. Kenworthy, Lieutenant Colonel; John Woodcock, Major. Colonel Haslett had served as Captain in the Sixty-sixth, and subsequently in the Seventy-third, of which he had been for several months the acting Major; Lieutenant Colonel Kenworthy had served on the Peninsula, in the Third United States Infantry, where he was severely wounded, and Major Woodcock had just been mustered out of a nine months' regiment. A large proportion of officers and men were well schooled soldiers. Soon after its organization, it proceeded to Camp Bradford, at Mankin's Woods, near Baltimore, where it remained for two weeks. At the end of that time, and when well drilled and in full expectation of being led to the front, it was ordered to Rock Island, Illinois, and upon its arrival there, was charged with guarding a camp for prisoners of war. The guard provided was insufficient for the duty required, and the service bore heavily upon this regiment. At the close of its term, it returned to Philadelphia, where, on the 11th of November, 1864, it was mustered out.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-EIGHTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was recruited in the city of Philadelphia, under the direction and aid of the Union League Association, during the summer of 1864. Recruiting was commenced soon after the muster out of service of the Reserve Corps, and Horatio G. Sickel, who had commanded the Third Reserve Regiment, was selected in conjunction with James H. Orne, Esq., Chairman of the Executive Committee of the association, to superintend the work of filling the ranks and organizing the command. In five weeks it was completed, and on the 9th of September, a regimental organization was effected, with the following field officers: Horatio G. Sickel, Colonel; John B. Murray, Lieutenant Colonel; Edwin A. Glenn, Major. Early on the morning of the 19th, the regiment moved from camp, and pausing at the Headquarters of the Union League to receive the State colors, thence proceeded to join the army of the Potomac in front of Petersburg. Upon its arrival it was assigned to the First Brigade, First Division, of the Fifth Corps, and joined it at a point on the Weldon Railroad, which had just been captured from the enemy. Soon after its arrival, Colonel Sickel was placed in command of the brigade, and Lieutenant Colonel Murray succeeded to the command of the regiment.

The battle of Peeble's Farm opened on the 30th, and here the regiment had its first baptism of fire. It had scarcely got into position, when incessant volleys of musketry and artillery were opened upon it from a wood in front, where the enemy was posted. Advancing at once to the attack, the regiment opened fire, and though little accustomed to the terrible ordeal to which it was subjected, finally succeeded by hard fighting, in driving the enemy from the first line of works, inflicting severe loss upon him, two of his field officers being included among the prisoners.* Breast-works were immediately thrown up, and here the regiment remained heavily engaged until the 2d of October, when it moved up near the enemy's works, where, for five hours, it held its ground under a severe fire. It was then withdrawn a short distance, and again threw up works, and on the following day went into camp half a mile to the rear. The regiment lost in this engagement one killed and five wounded. On the 27th, it moved with the corps for a demonstration upon the South Side Railroad, in which it was joined by the Second and Ninth Corps. With four days' rations and forty rounds of ammunition to the man, it moved at daylight, and after five hours toilsome marching, through dense timber, arrived in front of the enemy's formidable works, where it was exposed to a severe artillery fire. At sunset a strong picket line was thrown out, which was engaged nearly the entire night. Until noon of the following day, the pickets were kept busy, when the entire regiment was withdrawn two miles to the rear, where it was posted in support of batteries, but soon after returned to its encampment on the Squirrel Level Road. Here comfortable quarters were erected, in which the National Thanksgiving on the 27th of November was spent, in the enjoyment of a profusion of dainties sent by kind friends of members of the command at Philadelphia. On the 6th of December it marched with the corps for the destruction of the Weldon Railroad. Until the evening of the 9th, the work of destruction was vigorously pushed, the ties being burned and the rails twisted for a considerable distance beyond Bellefield. Upon the return march there was much suffering, the weather being intensely cold, and the troops being exposed to the peltings of a pitiless storm. Winter quarters were again erected, and a neat chapel for religious and other meetings was built, as had been previously done at the encampment on the Squirrel Level Road. Lieutenant Colonel Murray was relieved on account of physical disability on the 27th of December, and the command devolved on Major Glenn.

* In referring to this action, General Sickel says: "While our brigade was forming for the charge, the regimental commander misunderstood the order, and filed his regiment into a piece of woods in the rear, leaving our left exposed. When the right of the line reached the enemy's works, I found our flanks exposed and threatened, and a disaster might have been the result, but for the discerning sagacity of Captain John E. Parsons, Adjutant General of the brigade, who galloped all through a storm of bullets, re-formed the regiment, and directing the charge in person, routed the enemy, and the result was a complete victory.

On the 5th of February, 1865, the Fifth Corps, in light marching order, moved for an assault upon the enemy's works, and came upon them near Hatcher's Run. At three in the afternoon, the advance of the column encountered, and after a desperate struggle, carried a portion of his fortifications. Soon afterwards, the First Division, commanded by General Griffin, was sent for a diversion towards Dinwiddie Court House. This feint was a complete success. A large force of the enemy followed it, thus weakening the lines in front of the main body of the corps, which assaulted when this force was well away, and carried his works. Upon the return of the division, it was placed in the captured works, and a heavy skirmish line was thrown out. At three on the afternoon of the 6th, it was attacked by a heavy force of the enemy and driven in, a general engagement ensuing. General Sickel, seeing that the Second Brigade was hard pressed, led his command to its support. The One Hundred and Ninety-eighth moved at double quick, through mud and water, and wheeling sharply to the right into an open field, charged with shouts upon Mahone's rebel forces. Sickel with sword in hand led the charge, and with desperate valor his men fell upon the foe. After a sanguinary struggle, in which General Sickel received from a rifle shot, a painful flesh wound in the left thigh, the brigade succeeded in driving him from the field and re-establishing its lines. Determined to re-gain his lost ground, if valor could accomplish it, the enemy massed his forces during the night, and approaching cautiously, attacked in the darkness with overpowering force. For a time he gained possession of a part of the Union works. At the first signal of alarm, the One Hundred and Ninety-eighth rushed to arms, and delivering a volley, sprang upon the foe with the bayonet. The struggle for a time was hand to hand, muskets being clubbed, and bayonets freely used. He was finally beaten back, and amidst the fiery flashes of the musketry and of bursting shells, the works were re-gained and made secure. Strong lines of works were erected in rear, on the opposite side of Hatcher's Run, for the more ample protection of the position, and on the 14th, when the defenses were completed, the regiment moved half a mile to the rear, and for the third time built winter quarters and a chapel. The loss during the operations of the 6th and 7th, was three killed and thirteen wounded. Lieutenant Charles W. Frazier was among the killed, and Captain J. H. Withington, Jr., among the wounded.

On the 25th of March, the enemy having pierced the Ninth Corps' lines at Fort Steadman, the regiment was early put in motion, and during nearly the entire day was kept upon the march for the support of portions of the line where active operations were in progress. Late on the evening of the 28th, it was ordered to strike tents and rest upon its arms in readiness for an early march, the whole army awaiting the signal to deliver a decisive blow. At three o'clock on the morning of the 29th, the One Hundred and Ninety-eighth marched at double quick, leading the corps in a southerly direction, and crossing Rouanty Creek below the junction of Gravelly and Hatcher's runs, pursued the road to Dinwiddie Court House as far as the Quaker Road, into which it turned, and again crossing Gravelly Run, encountered the enemy near the Old Saw Mill, where he was strongly posted behind earth-works. A cleared field stretched out in front of his fortifications, which was flanked on either side by heavy timber, in which his sharp-shooters were posted. Across this space of a thousand yards, the regiment, in conjunction with the One Hundred and Eighty-fifth New York, and led by Sickel, dashed with determined bravery, and though receiving murderous volleys from front and flanks, reserved its fire until near the works, when, pouring in a well directed shot, it rushed upon the foe with the bayonet. The struggle for a few moments was at close quarters and desperate; but the firm bearing of the men of this brigade was triumphant, and the enemy was driven, though fighting most determinedly, and disputing every inch of ground with great valor. On reaching the Boydton Plank Road, unable to withstand the steady pressure brought to bear upon him, he broke and fled in confusion. In this action, known as the battle of Lewis' Farm, the regiment sustained grievous losses. Major Charles I. Macceuen and Captain George W. Mulfrey were killed, and General Sickel, Captains Samuel Wrigley, Benjamin F. Gardner and Thomas C. Spackman, and Lieutenants Jeremiah C. Keller and William A. Miller wounded. The entire loss was three hundred and eleven, of whom twenty-eight were killed and one hundred and seventeen wounded. After the surrender of Lee, the rebel General Ewell, in speaking of this battle, told General Chamberlain, that the One Hundred and Ninety-eighth, supported by the One Hundred and Eighty-fifth New York, and one battery of the Fifth United States Artillery, were fighting no less than three brigades of the best Confederate troops.

The regiment bivouacked upon the field, where it remained for thirty-six hours, exposed during a part of the time to a driving storm. On the morning of the 31st, it again moved off, leading the column, and came upon the enemy at White Oak Swamp. Quickly forming, it was led to the attack, and after a spirited action, drove him from the field. The loss was six killed and forty-six wounded. Lieutenant A. A. Pomeroy was among the killed and Captain Isaac Schroeder mortally wounded. Soon after the conclusion of the battle, the regiment moved forward towards Five Forks, and bivouacked for the night. On the following day it greeted with hearty cheers Sheridan's Cavalry, and when he had passed, joined in the movement, plunging into a dense thicket of pine which lay before it. Scarcely an hour had elapsed, when the stillness of the forest was broken by the sharp fire of the skirmishers, followed by heavy volleys. Hastening forward, the regiment soon reached the scene of conflict, encountering the enemy's skirmishers, and driving them in upon his heavy defensive works. As the Union line emerged from the timber, an assault was ordered, which was gallantly made, but failed to dislodge the enemy. As the troops were falling back, General Chamberlain, who was in command of the division, dashed up to Major Glenn, quietly awaiting orders, and exclaimed, "Major! can you take those works, and hold them?" Turning to his men, the Major asked, "boys, will you follow me?" With a wild cheer they answered, and pressing with their standard close upon the footsteps of their brave leader, dashed forward in the face of a terrific fire of musketry with irresistible force. Thrice was the standard beaten down, and as often was caught up and borne bravely forward, until finally, blood-stained and torn, it floated in triumph over the works. The enemy was driven and his ground was held. Filled with a soldier's pride, General Chamberlain, who had witnessed this gallant and triumphant charge, rode forward to congratulate the leader, and order his promotion on the field. But, alas! at the moment when the triumph was assured, and Major Glenn had seized one of the enemy's colors from the hands of a rebel standard bearer, he was pierced by a bullet, which inflicted a mortal wound. The evidences of rout and confusion were visible on every hand, and prisoners, guns, and battle-flags fell to the hands of the conquerors. The loss in the One Hundred and Ninety-eighth, was one killed and fifteen wounded. That night the regiment slept upon the field of its triumph, and at eleven on the following morning, moved on one of the most tiresome marches of its entire service, extending far into the night, and being resumed at light of the following day. On the 5th, the joyful tidings was received, that Richmond had fallen, and that Lee was retreating with his whole army. On the marching columns pressed, passing the debris of the fleeing enemy, and guided by the thunder of Sheridan's relentless guns. Late on the evening of the 8th, overcome with exhaustion, the troops threw themselves upon the ground and slept soundly. On the morrow, they were early on the march, and passing through a narrow curtain of wood, suddenly came upon a grand spectacle. There, on the wide fields stretching far away, and surrounded by heavy timber, completely hemmed in by the Union forces, was Lee's entire army. The skirmishers advanced, and the enemy withdrew to his main line; but soon a white flag was displayed, and the news of the surrender quickly spread from rank to rank through the Union army. On the 11th, the enemy stacked arms and furled his flags, and on the 15th, the regiment commenced the homeward march. At Arlington Heights it went into camp, where it remained until the 3d of June, when it was mustered out of service, and returning to Philadelphia, was received with demonstrations of rejoicing.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETY-NINTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was organized at Philadelphia, in the fall of 1864, to serve for the period of one year, with the following field officers: James C. Briscoe, Colonel; Ambrose A. Lechler, Lieutenant Colonel; William A. F. Gehr, Major. Many of the officers and men had seen service in other organizations, Colonel Briscoe having served upon the staffs of several general officers, as Chief of Engineers, and Lieutenant Colonel Lechler as Colonel of the One Hundred and Seventy-sixth. Upon being ordered to the field in October, it proceeded to Deep Bottom Landing, on the James, and was assigned to the First Brigade, First Division of the Twenty-fourth Corps, taking position upon the extreme right of the line of the army of the James, on the New Market Road. It was immediately put to fortifying, and soon had substantial breast-works, with well poised abatis in front. Shortly after its arrival, the Army of the James went into winter-quarters, and during the inclement season, hostile demonstrations were almost entirely suspended. During this period the regiment was thoroughly drilled, and was employed on picket duty, in building fortifications, and in cutting and constructing roads. The discipline was strict, and the sanitary provisions most excellent, so that spring found the command in good condition for active service.

On the 27th of March, 1865, the division received marching orders, and crossing the James on the following day, moved southward, marching the entire night, and arrived on the 29th, in front of the rebel works. On the 2d of April, the division was led to the assault. Forts Gregg and Alexander, two strong works were in front, well mounted and efficiently manned. Against these the Union assaulting line was repeatedly led, but without success. Finally a strong column was formed, and being led with great spirit and determination, compelled the garrison, after having had three-quarters of its number slain, to surrender. President Lincoln, who was at the time at City Point, telegraphed the news of this success to the Secretary of War, in these words: "A portion of Foster's Division, Twenty-fourth Corps, made a most gallant charge this afternoon, and captured a very important fort from the enemy, with its entire garrison." The regiment participated in the charge here alluded to, and suffered severely. Eighteen of its number were killed or mortally wounded, including two officers, Captain Patrick O'Murphy and Lieutenant Robert M'Millan, and ninety-one wounded, including six officers, Colonel Briscoe, Captains John G. Bippus, Oliver C. Gregory, and Lieutenants Frank Ellison, Price C. Williams, and James Patton. For his gallantry in this action, Colonel Briscoe was brevetted Brigadier General, and placed in command of the brigade, and Lieutenant Colonel Robert P. Hughes, who had succeeded Lieutenant Colonel Lechler, took command of the regiment.

As soon as the victory at Petersburg was made complete, the regiment joined in the pursuit of the retreating rebel army, following along the South Side Railroad to Burkesville, and thence to Appomattox, skirmishing by the way, having two killed and one wounded in the affair at Rice's Station on the 6th, and two killed and eight wounded in the final collision of the two armies on the 9th, near Appomattox Court House. Soon after the surrender, which occurred on the same day, the division was ordered to Richmond, and went into camp upon its arrival, two miles north of the city. Here the regiment remained, engaged in various duties until the 28th of June, when it was mustered out of service. The recruits were transferred to the One Hundred and Eighty-eighth regiment, of which Colonel Briscoe was made commander, and with that regiment was stationed at various points throughout Virginia, for provost duty. They were finally mustered out of service on the 14th of December.

TWO HUNDREDTH REGIMENT.

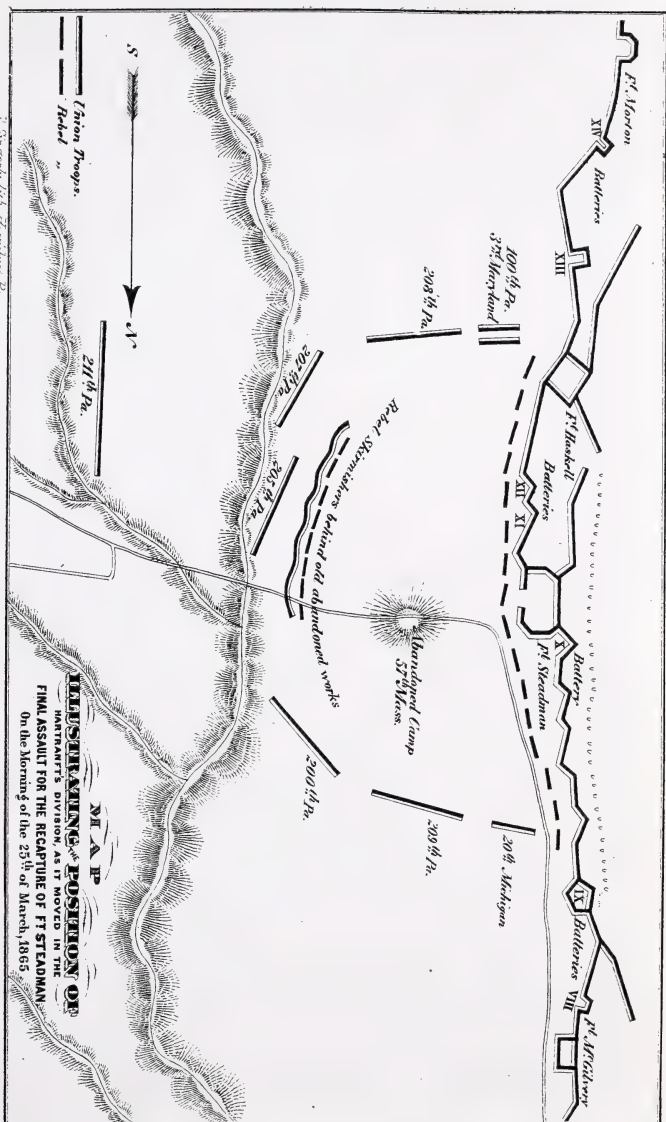

THE troops composing this regiment were principally recruited in the counties of York, Cumberland, and Dauphin, to serve for one year, and were organized at Camp Curtin, on the 3d of September, 1864, with the following field officers: Charles W. Diven, formerly Major of the Twelfth Reserve, Colonel; W. H. H. McCall, formerly a Captain in the Fifth Reserve, Lieutenant Colonel; Jacob Rehner, formerly a Captain in the Sixth Reserve, Major. On the 9th of September, it was ordered to join the army of the James, and upon its arrival at the front, was posted near Dutch Gap, where it rendered efficient service in holding the line.

On the night of the 19th of November, the enemy made an attack, with the design of breaking the Union line, but was handsomely repulsed, the Two Hundredth taking an active part and sharing in the triumph. On the 28th, the regiment was transferred to the army of the Potomac, where it was brigaded with the Two Hundred and Eighth and Two Hundred and Ninth Pennsylvania regiments, constituting the First Brigade, Third Division* of the Ninth Corps, to the command of which Colonel Diven was assigned, General Hartranft commanding the division, and General Parke the corps. The corps at this time occupied the line of intrenchments on the Petersburg front, stretching from the Appomattox to Fort Walker. Hartranft's Division was posted in rear of the main line, as a reserve force, the Two Hundredth occupying a camp near the Dunn House Battery, on the road leading up to Fort Steadman. During the winter the regiment was thoroughly drilled, and performed fatigue duty upon works thrown up for the protection of the rear of the army. It also participated in several movements in which the division acted as a support to other corps, but did not become actively engaged.

As the time approached for the general movement of the Union army on the spring campaign, the rebel leader sought by some daring stroke to loosen the grasp of his antagonist. Should such a blow prove effective, he might still hold his ground, or should it fail, it might serve by attracting troops to the threatened point, to open a way of retreat to form a junction with Johnston in North Carolina. Accordingly, on the night of the 24th of March, 1865, without materially weakening his main line, he concentrated three powerful divisions

*Organization of the Third Division, General John F. Hartranft; Ninth Corps, General John G. Parke; First Brigade commanded by Colonel Charles W. Diven; Two Hundredth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieutenant Colonel W. H. H. McCall; Two Hundred and Eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Alfred B. McCalmont; Two Hundred and Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Tobias B. Kauffman. Second Brigade commanded by Colonel Joseph A. Matthews; Two Hundred and Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieutenant Colonel William F. Walter; Two Hundred and Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel Robert C. Cox; Two Hundred and Eleventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Colonel James H. Trimble.

under Generals Gordon and Ransom, on the extreme east of the rebel line, opposite Fort Steadman, and the commanding ground about Meade's Station, on the military railroad connecting with the base of supply to the whole army at City Point, and at a little before light on the morning of the 25th, having stealthily approached and silenced the Union pickets, burst in overpowering columns upon the main line, capturing at a blow Fort Steadman, and batteries to right and left from Fort Haskell to Battery 9, thus swinging open wide gates in the fortified line, and successfully preparing the way for the advance of the powerful rebel supports which stood ready to move. The portion of the line broken, was at the time occupied by M'Laughlin's Brigade of Wilcox's Division, the greater portion of which was captured. General Hartranft, ever on the alert in the hour of danger, whose division was lying in reserve in rear of the Ninth Corps line, detecting by the sound of the fray, that a powerful and determined attack was being made, dispatched an aid, Captain Dalien, from his headquarters at the Avery House, to the scene of conflict, over a mile and a-half to the right. At ten minutes past five, the aid returned, disclosing the tale of disaster. In the meantime, General Hartranft had notified his brigade commanders to hold their troops in readiness to move at an instant's notice, and on receipt of an order from General Parke to reinforce General Wilcox, which came at the moment of mounting, he galloped off to General Wilcox's headquarters, two miles away, and about a mile and a quarter in rear of Fort Steadman. After a moment's consultation, he determined to lead his command at once upon the enemy, and directing the Two Hundred and Ninth to move to the right down a ravine, where it would have partial shelter, he proceeded with the Two Hundredth which was nearest to, and immediately in rear of the Fort, to face the enemy, who was rapidly advancing, having already overrun and captured the camp of the Fifty-seventh Massachusetts, and all but a handful of the men. These had rallied at an old rebel work and were contesting the ground with the enemy's skirmishers. On coming up to these, he ordered them to advance, and followed with his regiment in line of battle, until he had reached the brow of the hill, where was the camp of the Fifty-seventh. Here the fire became very hot, but the ground was held, and a steady and most destructive fire returned. Finally, however, finding the enemy too strong, and the right of the regiment suffering severely from a heavy fire from the Fort and from the road in front, it was forced to retire a few rods to an old line of works. Immediately rallying and re-forming, it was again led forward to a commanding position, where its fire was most destructive, and where it in turn suffered fearfully. For twenty minutes the regiment stood firm, while the work of carnage went on. But the storm of deadly missiles which here swept its ranks, exposed as it was, was too terrible to withstand, and it again fell back to the old line of works, where it was re-formed. Other troops had now come up, and were also engaged, the Two Hundred and Ninth standing on its right, and with two small regiments of Michigan troops, the Second and Seventeenth, reaching out to Battery 9. On its left for a short distance, the enemy still held an old line of works nearly continuous with that held by the Two Hundredth; but beyond, was the Two Hundred and Eighth regiment, which, together with detachments from the First Division, reached to Fort Haskell. In rear of the centre, in the ravine, under cover, were the Two Hundred and Fifth and Two Hundred and Seventh, and upon the high ground, a mile back, near Meade's Station, was the Two Hundred and Eleventh. Having thus drawn a cordon around the break and visited every part of the line, and having received from General Parke an order to re-take the lost works, General Hartranft made his dispositions for attack. To each of his regiments he sent a notice that he would move to the assault in fifteen minutes, and that the advance of the Two Hundred and Eleventh upon the commanding ground in rear, should be the signal for a concerted movement. This regiment had nearly full ranks, and when drawn out in line, it showed like a brigade. As it began to move, the enemy was seen to waver, and as the entire line dashed resolutely forward, the rebels threw down their arms in large numbers, and began to pass through the advancing ranks to the rear. The triumph was complete. Steadman was re-taken, and the entire portion of the line lost, was re-gained. The loss in the regiment in this brief engagement was very severe, being fourteen killed and one hundred and nine wounded, an aggregate of one hundred and twenty-three. Colonel Diven, in command of the brigade, Captain Frank A. Hoffman, and Lieutenants Martin L. Duhling, William H. Drayer, Thomas C. Crawford, and John M'Williams were among the wounded. Lieutenant Colonel M'Call, who led the regiment, says in his official report: "The officers and men of my command all behaved with the greatest daring and bravery. Captain Hoffman seized the colors in the hands of a rebel color-bearer, but was shot through the hand and knocked down with a musket, retaining a piece of the flag which he tore from the standard. Private Levi A. Smith, of company E, deserves particular mention. After the color-bearer had been shot down, I grasped the colors and called for some one to take them, when he, boy as he was, sprang forward, and carried them throughout the action." General Hartranft, in his official report, says: "The Two Hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers, Lieutenant Colonel M'Call commanding, deserves particular mention. This regiment was put to the severest test, and behaved with the greatest firmness and steadiness. The regiment made two stubborn attacks on the enemy, and when compelled to retire, it fell back in good order." General Parke, in his dispatch to General Grant, says: "Great praise is due to Hartranft for the skill displayed in handling his division, which behaved with great gallantry, in this, its first engagement." Soon after the conclusion of the battle, the enemy sent in a flag of truce for removing his dead and wounded, and under it, Major Bertolotte, General Hartranft's Assistant Adjutant General, delivered one hundred and twenty dead, and fourteen badly wounded. The works were re-gained, with all the guns uninjured, and nearly three thousand prisoners with small arms and battle flags were captured.

The following stirring order was issued by General Hartranft, congratulating his division: "With feelings of pride and satisfaction, the Brigadier General commanding, tenders his congratulations to the men and officers of his command for their gallant and heroic conduct in the brilliant achievement of to-day, which resulted in the re-capture of Fort Steadman and the entire line, together with battle-flags, a large number of prisoners, and small arms. You have won a name and reputation of which veterans might feel proud, and have proved yourselves worthy of being the associates of the brave soldiers of the old Ninth Corps, and the General commanding hopes that this, your first engagement, and signal victory, will nerve and stimulate you for the performance of future deeds of gallantry. To the wounded, and to the families of those who have so nobly fallen in defense of their country, the General commanding tenders his most heartfelt sympathies."

Active operations were now fairly inaugurated, and later on the same day, there was severe fighting further to the left, which resulted in the capture of five hundred of the enemy. On the evening of the 30th, the division was massed, and formed for an assault, but before moving, the order directing it was countermanded. On the evening of the 1st of April, the order was renewed, and the dispositions again made for an assault. At four A. M. of the 2d, it was delivered, Lieutenant Colonel McCall leading the brigade, and Major Rehner the regiment. The column was formed in front of Fort Sedgwick, the left resting on the Jerusalem Plank Road, Potter's Division being formed on the left of the road, to whose movements it was to conform. Strong parties of Engineers were thrown forward to cut away the abatis, and to break the wires connecting the chevaux-de-frise, so as to make openings for the advance of the assaulting party. This work was thoroughly done, and the column advanced in the most gallant manner. As it moved on, it was subjected to a severe fire from the front, and from powerful batteries which raked the ground where it was obliged to pass; but the works were triumphantly carried, and the guns which were found were turned upon the foe. The Two Hundredth was held in reserve, when the first dash was made, but was ordered to follow almost immediately, and was subjected to a like destructive fire. "It is but justice here to state," says Major Rehner in his official report, "that the officers and men of my regiment did, in this charge under a heavy fire from the enemy, behave with great gallantry and coolness, at no time showing the least sign of faltering or breaking. At this point of the enemy's works we came in possession of two batteries, each mounting three guns. I at once sent to the rear for artillerists, who were accordingly furnished, and the captured guns turned upon the enemy. These works were held during the entire day by my regiment, and were all the time under a heavy fire of mixed artillery. Three desperate and determined charges were made by the enemy, in which they put forth every effort to re-capture the forts, but they were each time repulsed speedily and with heavy loss. * * * After darkness had set in, I was ordered to remove the abatis and chevaux-de-frise formerly used by the enemy and now in our rear, round so as to confront and face the enemy, and I at the same time advanced one hundred men as a picket line. After this period no attempt was made by the enemy to re-take the works, and by ten P. M., firing began to be less rapid. At midnight no firing at all was done, except now and then a shot from a sharp-shooter." At four on the following morning, the division advanced rapidly, and entered the city of Petersburg unopposed, the enemy having withdrawn during the night. The loss in the engagement was two killed, thirty-four wounded and three missing, an aggregate of thirty-nine. Major Rehner was among the wounded, but did not leave the field.

The pursuit of the rebel army was at once commenced, the corps following the line of the South Side Railroad, and was continued with brief intervals for rest, until the 9th, when the rebel army surrendered. The regiment then went into camp at Nottoway Court House, where it remained until after the surrender of Johnston, when it marched to City Point, and thence proceeded by transport to Alexandria. Here it remained until the 30th of May, when the recruits were transferred to the Fifty-first Pennsylvania, and the rest of the regiment were mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND FIRST REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was recruited at Harrisburg, for one year's service, in compliance with an order of Governor Curtin, of the 29th of July, 1864, issued under the call of the President of July 18th, for five hundred thousand men. With the exception of a part of company K, recruited in Franklin county, and squadrons from Duncannon and Fairview, in the counties of Perry and Cumberland, the men were from Dauphin county. Of the ten regiments required from Pennsylvania, under this call, this was the first ready for duty, its ranks having been filled to the maximum strength in less than thirty days. The men rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where they were organized in companies, clothed, armed, and equipped, and on the 29th of August, a regimental organization was effected, with the following field officers: F. Asbury Awl, Colonel; J. Wesley Awl, Lieutenant Colonel; John T. Morgan, Major. The field officers had all served in the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment, and large numbers of the line officers and men had previously been in the field. Immediately after its organization, it proceeded to Chambersburg, and went into camp five miles from the town, near the point where the pike crosses Back Creek. It was here schooled and regularly drilled, and on the 12th, started on a three days' march for exercise. On the 17th of September, company H was ordered to York, for duty at the general hospital established there, and on the same day, companies F and G, were ordered to Bloody Run, and upon their arrival reported to General O. S. Ferry, in command of the Juniata District. Shortly afterwards company F was sent to M'Connellsburg, and during the fall and winter, these two companies were employed in the disagreeable, but arduous duties of arresting deserters, nearly five hundred being apprehended and sent to the front. In December, General Ferry was relieved, and Major Morgan, of the Two Hundred and First, was assigned to the command of the district. On the 18th of September, company E was ordered to Scranton, and upon its arrival, reported to Captain S. N. Bradford, Provost Marshal of the district, and was employed in provost duty. On the 22d, the remaining companies were again led out upon a three days' march for exercise, accompanied by artillery. On the 28th, the command was ordered to Pittsburg, and had proceeded as far as Huntingdon, when the order was countermanded, and it was directed to proceed via Washington and Alexandria to Manassas Junction, and was deployed for duty along the line of the Manassas Gap Railroad, with headquarters at Gainville. Subsequently it moved to Thoroughfare Gap, where it remained until the road was broken up and the iron removed. On the 13th of November, it was ordered to Alexandria, and was placed in Camp

Slough. It was here engaged in guard duty in the city, in the defenses south of the Potomac, and upon railroad trains, and as escort to recruits and stragglers on their way to the front. Many of the officers of the regiment were detailed as members on a general court martial. Lieutenant Colonel Aul was, early in May, placed in command of the Soldiers' Rest at Alexandria, which was a camp for distribution, and remained there until the summons came for him to re-join his regiment for muster out.

On the 24th of May, 1865, the company which had been on duty at Bloody Run, in pursuance of orders, proceeded to Pittsburg, where it was put upon provost duty, and its commander, Captain Ensminger, was made Provost Marshal of the post. Two days later, the main body of the regiment at Alexandria, was ordered to duty at Fort Delaware, where it remained until the close of its term. About the middle of June, the scattered detachments assembled at Harrisburg, where, on the 21st, the regiment was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND SECOND REGIMENT.

COMPANY A, of this regiment, was recruited in Carbon county, B in Juniata, C in Adams, D in Northumberland and Cumberland, E in Lehigh, F in Northampton, G and H in Cumberland, I in Union, and K in Huntingdon. Recruiting commenced early in August, the troops rendezvousing at Camp Curtin, where, on the 3d of September, the regiment was organized, by the choice of the following field officers: Charles Albright, of Carbon county, Colonel; John A. Maus, of Union county, Lieutenant Colonel; Walter H. Seip, of Lehigh county, Major. Colonel Albright had served as Colonel of the One Hundred and Thirty-second Regiment, and a number of other officers and a portion of the men had been in the service; but the majority of the command knew little of military duty. On the 10th, the regiment proceeded to Camp Couch, near the town of Chambersburg, where it was subjected to thorough drill, and on the 23d was led out on a three days' march for exercise. General Couch, who was in command of the Department of the Susquehanna, having encountered some opposition in the execution of his orders in Columbia county, sent Colonel Albright to the scene of the disturbance, who was, consequently, for some time, absent from his regiment, but in the meantime performed the duties of his difficult mission to the entire satisfaction of the Commanding General.

On the 29th, the regiment proceeded via Washington, to Alexandria, and upon its arrival, was sent by General Slough, in command of the post, to duty on the Manassas Gap Railroad, taking position along the road from Thoroughfare Gap to Rectortown. General Sheridan had just previous opened his brilliant campaign in the Shenandoah Valley, and over this road the supplies for his army were transported. To keep it open, was consequently of vital importance, and to break it up and hinder and destroy trains, was a cherished purpose of the disloyal inhabitants dwelling along the line, and of Moseby and his guerrillas, who claimed this as their favorite stamping ground. This duty was exceedingly arduous and harassing. If a soldier went outside the lines, he was immediately set upon, and either murdered or sent away into captivity. Frequent collisions occurred, in some of which the skirmishing was brisk; those at Salem on the 8th and 16th, resulting in some loss. In both of these the enemy was driven, a number of his men being killed and wounded. On the 10th, a party of the enemy succeeded in throwing a train of cars from the track while running at full speed, killing four or five, and severely wounding about twenty. Not content with this, they poured repeated volleys upon the poor sufferers in the wreck. Upon hearing of this outrage, Colonel Albright hastened to the scene of the disaster, and immediately ordered that every building, within the radius of one mile of the wreck, should be burned. To secure trains against similar disasters in the future, all the prominent rebels along the line were apprehended, and a portion of them made to accompany each train. This had the desired effect, and the trains were no more disturbed. In speaking of this part of its service, Colonel Albright says: "The soldiers would have preferred being with the army at the front to doing this duty. Guarding railroads is always distasteful to soldiers, they being in constant danger, and without any opportunity, scarcely, of winning honorable distinction. But they appreciated the necessity of the work and cheerfully performed it." "Constant activity and vigilance," says another officer, "were required; for guerrilla bands, frequently disguised in our uniforms, constantly prowled about the country, attacking detachments inferior to them in numbers, and, like the stealthy Indian of the western frontier, creeping upon our sentries and assassinating them."

When the triumphs of Sheridan in the valley were assured, and the enemy effectually routed, this railroad was abandoned, and the ties and rails were removed to Alexandria. In this laborious duty the regiment was engaged, and when completed, it retired to Alexandria, where it was assigned to the duty of guarding a portion of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, extending from Bull Run to Alexandria, with headquarters at Fairfax Station. In the vicinity of the Station, four large works were built, and the troops were kept busy in protecting the woodmen engaged in chopping, and the teams in moving wood to the Station for the use of the army. In a communication sent on the 1st of January, 1865, as a New Year's greeting to the regiment by General Gamble, in command of the brigade, occurs the following acknowledgment of its good conduct and the soldierly qualities of its commander: "From my personal knowledge, and the report of the inspecting officer, I consider it my duty to return you my thanks for your energy and personal attention to the duties and interests of your command. You have a good regiment, and I am glad to know the right kind of a Colonel is at the head of it."

Towards the close of May, 1865, the regiment was ordered to Philadelphia, where it reported upon its arrival to General Cadwalader, and was sent by him to the anthracite coal regions of the State. Headquarters of the regiment were established at Tamaqua, and the command was distributed in detachments to various points in that region. Colonel Albright, who had been previously brevetted Brigadier General, was placed in command of the district. Early in July, company A was sent to Pittsburg. Towards the close of July, the detachments assembled in Harrisburg, and on the 3d of August, the regiment was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND THIRD REGIMENT.

THE troops composing this regiment were recruited at the suggestion of General Birney, to serve as sharpshooters in his division; but the General dying soon after their reaching the field, they were treated as an ordinary infantry regiment. They were from the city of Philadelphia, and from the counties of Lycoming, Lancaster, Chester, and Delaware, and were organized at Camp Cadwalader, near Philadelphia, on the 10th of September, 1864, with the following field officers: John W. Moore, Colonel; Jonas W. Lyman, Lieutenant Colonel; Oliver P. Harding, Major. Colonel Moore had served as Major in the Ninety-ninth, Lieutenant Colonel Lyman as Surgeon of the Fifty-seventh, and the entire field and staff were veteran officers. On the 22d the regiment departed for the front, and on the 27th arrived before Petersburg, where it was assigned to the Second Brigade, Second Division, of the Tenth Corps. On the same day, the Tenth and Eighteenth corps moved to Deep Bottom, on the James, and advanced upon the enemy's works, at Chapin's Farm and the New Market Road, achieving a signal success. During the engagement, the regiment performed provost duty at Deep Bottom, escorting prisoners to the rear, and picketing Malvern Hill. On the 5th it moved up to the front, re-joining its brigade, and participated in the engagement of the 7th, where the enemy assumed the offensive, but where his repeated assaults were repulsed, and the ground lost by the cavalry under Kautz regained. Until the 27th, it remained in the works, but on that day moved out with the corps on the Darbytown Road, where the enemy was encountered, and a strong demonstration on his front made, returning on the following day to its former position. The regiment lost one killed and six wounded in this engagement. Subsequently the army of the James was re-organized, and the Two Hundred and Third became part of the Second Brigade, Second Division, of the Twenty-fourth Corps, the brigade being under command of Colonel Penypacker, and the division under General Ames.

On the 7th of December, the infantry troops destined for the attack on Fort Fisher, consisting of Ames' Division of the Twenty-fourth Corps, and Paine's of the Twenty-fifth, about six thousand five hundred strong, moved from camp, and proceeding to Fortress Monroe, embarked upon transports on the 13th, to accompany the powerful naval force in readiness to sail under Admiral Porter. On the 24th the bombardment of the fort commenced, and on the 25th, a force of three thousand troops landed. Two hundred boys belonging to the Junior North Carolina Reserves were captured, and a reconnoitering force under General Curtis, succeeded in reaching the parapets of the fort; but General Butler, who led the expedition, and General Weitzel, his Lieutenant, concurred in the opinion, that the work could not be carried by assault, and retiring, the forces returned to their camps on the James. On the 2d of January, General Terry was sent with the same forces and an additional brigade of the Twenty-fourth Corps, to renew the attempt at the reduction of the fort. Ames' Division was selected to lead the assault. The three brigades composing his division were led respectively by Curtis, Pennypacker, and Bell. At a preconcerted signal, the fleet, which had been delivering a heavy fire upon the fort, changed its direction, so as to leave the ground free for the movements of the army, and Curtis dashed forward and carried a portion of the parapet. Pennypacker followed, overlapping Curtis' right, and drove the enemy from the palisading. In this charge the Two Hundred and Third moved under a storm of bullets and grape-shot, which rent its ranks with fearful effect. After reaching the palisades, an opening was found in front, which led to the fort, protected by two guns. Upon these the regiment was led at a run, and with a wild shout, and though suffering from a direct and decimating fire, the guns were taken. Without pausing, it was led on, and hand to hand, fighting with desperate valor, the first traverse was carried. The smaller openings were thus relieved, through which the men poured like a torrent. A footing was gained, though at a heavy cost. Colonel Pennypacker had fallen, and was reported mortally hurt, but there was no cessation in the fight. Traverse after traverse, seventeen in all, still remained to be overcome. Colonel Moore, with the flag in one hand, and his sword in the other, led gallantly on until three of the traverses were carried, and the fourth was being charged, when he fell dead, still grasping the flag staff, the banner riddled with bullets and more than half shot away. The enemy here made a desperate effort to re-gain his lost ground, but by equal valor was he met, and Lieutenant Colonel Lyman, the only field officer left, leading on his trusty men, and moving among them and encouraging by his example, succeeded in repulsing every charge. "The fifth traverse," says an eye witness, "had been taken. The fight was on the sixth mound. At the base of the mound Colonel Lyman met a rebel Major. Their swords crossed and flashed. I saw the contest, and saw the Colonel's sword fly from his hand. I hastened to reach him and give him aid, but stumbled and fell. When I recovered my feet, and caught sight of them again, the Major was in the act of rising from the ground, and the Colonel was drawing his revolver, with which he shot his antagonist dead. He recovered his sword coolly, called to the men and led a charge on the seventh traverse, but fell before it was taken, shot through the heart." From half-past three in the afternoon, until far into the night, this desperate struggle was maintained, when overcome and driven from the last traverse, the enemy finally yielded, and the victory was complete. But during those mortal hours, nearly half of the entire regiment had gone down in the fight. Forty-six were killed, and one hundred and forty-five wounded. Colonel Moore, Lieutenant Colonel Lyman, Captain Jacob T. Smallwood and Lieutenant Matthias Hart, were of the killed, and Captains Benjamin Brooke and Alexander McCune, and Lieutenants Charles B. Duncan, Peter Alt, William R. T. Boggs, and John S. Wetter of the wounded. Of Colonel Moore, General Ames says in his official report, "he behaved with the most distinguished gallantry. He was killed within the fort, in advance of his regiment. Few equaled, none surpassed this brave officer." The flag had over eighty rents made in it that day by bullets and grape shot. "These traverses," says Admiral Porter, "are immense bomb-proofs, about sixty feet long, fifty feet wide, and twenty feet high—seventeen of them in all, being on the north-east face. Between each traverse, are one or two heavy guns." "I have since visited," he again says, "Fort Fisher and its adjoining works, and find their strength greatly beyond what I had conceived. An engineer might be excusable in saying they could not be captured, except by regular siege. I wonder, even now, how it was done. The work as I said before, is really stronger than the Malakoff Tower, which defied so long the combined powers of France and England, and yet it was captured by a handful of men, under the fire of the guns of the fleet, and in seven hours after the attack commenced in earnest."

After the capture of Fort Fisher, the regiment lay quietly in camp until the 11th of February, when an advance was made on Wilmington. The enemy had a line of works across the Peninsula, from the Cape Fear River to the ocean, and this was first encountered. The regiment was thrown out as skirmishers, covering the brigade, and succeeded in getting the enemy's rifle pits in front of the works, but on account of the dense undergrowth and bushes, and the swampy nature of the ground, the line of battle could not advance. Once in the rifle-pits, and under the fierce fire of the enemy, without support, the regiment could not withdraw until night-fall, when, under cover of darkness, the men succeeded in crawling, man by man, stealthily away. Finding it impossible to break the lines at that point, the division was moved to the right bank of the river, and joined the command of General Schofield, who had just arrived with his army from the west. Moving up in rear of Fort Anderson, it was found abandoned, as well as the works which it commanded on the opposite side. Thus, what would have cost many lives by direct assault, was gained without firing a gun by a flank movement.

Re-crossing the river, the advance on Wilmington was resumed, and on the evening of the 20th, the enemy was found strongly intrenched at a point five miles from the city. Dispositions were made and an attack opened on the 21st, in which the regiment lost four wounded; but during the succeeding night, the enemy evacuated his works, and on the following morning, Wilmington, which had long been a principal resort for blockade runners, was entered. The enemy was pursued nine miles, when the Union column was halted, the bridge having been destroyed at that point, and soon after returned to camp near the city. Early in March, the columns were again put in motion towards Goldsboro, and formed junction with Sherman's army, while the battle of Bentonville was in progress. On the following day the regiment moved back to Faison's Station, where it was charged with guarding the line of railway. On the 10th of April, the columns were again put in motion towards Raleigh, the enemy retiring, as it advanced, without serious fighting, until the 18th of April, when Johnston made an agreement for the suspension of hostilities, and on the 26th finally surrendered, the war being substantially at an end. The regiment was then assigned to duty at Raleigh, where it remained until the 22d of June, when it was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND FOURTH, FIFTH ARTILLERY.

THIS regiment was principally recruited in the county of Allegheny, though considerable numbers were from the counties of Lawrence, Beaver, Cambria, Westmoreland, Armstrong, and Greene. Recruiting was commenced in August, 1864, the men rendezvousing at Camp Reynolds, near Pittsburg, where, on the 10th of September, an organization was effected by the selection of the following field officers: George S. Gallupe, formerly Major in the Eighth Reserve Regiment, Colonel; Joseph Browne, formerly Major of the One Hundred and Second Pennsylvania Regiment, Lieutenant Colonel; Michael Baer, Howard Morton, and George M. Irwin, Majors. Soon after its organization, it was ordered to Washington, and upon its arrival, was assigned to duty in the forts north of the Capitol. On the 28th, the regiment was sent out to cover the construction trains engaged in opening the Manassas Gap Railroad, and was posted by battalion along the line, the government purposing to make it the line of supply for Sheridan's army, then in the Shenandoah Valley. The First Battalion, under command of Major Morton, which was in rear of the other two, while at Salem, was suddenly attacked at noon of the 8th of October, by a superior force of Moseby's command, consisting of cavalry and artillery. Line of battle was formed, and details from the several companies were thrown out as skirmishers, but the enemy showing superior strength and opening with artillery, it was deemed prudent not to give battle, and the battalion began slowly to retire towards Rectortown, where the other battalions, under Lieutenant Colonel Browne, were stationed. Moseby followed closely, and in the progress of the movement, succeeded in cutting off and capturing Lieutenants Hay and Miltenberger, and twenty men of the skirmish company. On the 10th, Moseby took position on a hill, overlooking the ground which the regiment occupied at Rectortown, and opened a hot fire with his artillery, hoping thereby to prepare the way for a successful charge, and the capture of the trains and engines employed in re-constructing the road. The trains, however, being shielded by cuts of the road-bed, sustained no damage, and only three or four men in the regiment were killed and wounded. When this fire had been kept up about two hours, an advance on Moseby's front was made by one battalion, while a detachment of sharpshooters was sent by a detour, to approach secretly and pick off the gunners. Discovering the movement, Moseby withdrew, and took position on an eminence three miles away. On the following day, the regiment was ordered to return with the trains to White Plains. The enemy at once gave chase, and having destroyed the track in several places, made preparations for vigorous work. Leaving the First Battalion at Rectortown, and placing the Second in front, and the Third in rear of the train, with skirmishers thrown out, the command moved forward. Two miles out, a bridge was found destroyed, compelling the train to stop at a point where it could be easily raked by the enemy, from a hill six hundred yards to the right and rear, which he designed to occupy; but the skirmishers of the regiment reached a position commanding it first, and when his advance appeared, poured in so hot a fire from their Sharp's rifles, that it compelled him to retire, and to move over to the head of a ravine down which he had intended to point his artillery. The troops in charge of the trains were, however, advised of this in time to save them from exposure. Skirmishing was kept up while the road was being repaired, but by skillful dispositions, the enemy was prevented from gaining any advantage. Near Salem, the road was again found broken, but a battalion of the Two Hundred and Second had, in the meantime, come up and taken position on an eminence commanding the road, and held the enemy in check, who was thereby prevented from gaining any favorable position for his artillery. On the following day, Moseby retired with his artillery to the mountain, and the Second and Third battalions moved back to Rectortown. A few days later, these battalions, under Lieutenant Colonel Browne, proceeded to Piedmont, to which point the railroad had been completed. A favorite pastime with Moseby had been to waylay trains, and throw them from the track when under full headway. As a means of protection, a number of prominent rebel citizens living along the line, were placed upon the trains, and for several weeks were kept riding up and down the road. This precaution had the desired effect, and the trains made their trips without molestation. A few weeks after arriving at Piedmont, two companies of this regiment, with a squadron of the Thirteenth New York Cavalry, moved by night into the mountains and succeeded in capturing Moseby's artillery, four pieces and caissons, and several prisoners, and brought them safely into camp at daylight. One of the guns, a twelve-pounder, had been presented to Moseby by General Early.

Shortly after the battle of Cedar Creek, the regiment returned to the forts north of Washington, tearing up and bringing away, in conjunction with other troops, the material of the road, as it came. In this position it remained but a few days, when it was again ordered to Virginia, and was posted for the winter, as follows: The First Battalion, under Major Baer, at Prospect Hill, on the pike leading from Chain Bridge to Leesburg; the Second Battalion, under Major Irwin, at Vienna, on the Loudon and Hampshire Railroad, and here was established the headquarters of the regiment; the Third Battalion, under Captain Kent, subsequently Major Hope, who had succeeded Major Morton, at Fairfax Court House. The regiment was engaged during the winter, in building immense stockades and block-houses, and the usual drill and picket duty. Expeditions were also sent out in the spring of 1863, to the Bull Run battle ground, where burying parties were for some time employed in interring the dead of the Second Bull Run battle, whose bodies had laid uncare for since the date of the battle. Nearly two thousand were buried, and monuments erected over their graves. In June, the regiment was ordered to Pittsburg, where it was received with imposing demonstrations, and where, on the 30th, it was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTH REGIMENT.

COMPANIES A, C, and I of this regiment, were recruited in Blair county, B, E, and H in Berks, F, and K in Mifflin, D in Huntingdon, and G in Blair, Dauphin, and Franklin. They rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where, on the 2d of September, 1864, the following field officers were selected: Joseph A. Mathews, Colonel; William F. Walter, Lieutenant Colonel; B. Mortimer Morrow, Major. Colonel Mathews had served in the Forty-sixth, and in the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth, Lieutenant Colonel Walter in the One Hundred and Fourth, Major Morrow in the Eighty-fourth regiment, and a large proportion of the remaining officers and men were skilled in military duty. On the 5th, the regiment left Harrisburg, and proceeding to Washington, crossed the Potomac, and went into camp at Fort Corcoran. At the end of a week, it moved to Camp Distribution, and taking in charge thirteen hundred recruits and drafted men, proceeded with them by transports to City Point. Moving out four miles, it reported to General Benham, and under his direction, was engaged in picketing from the left of the army line, to the James, and in building forts and earth-works for the defense of City Point, nearly the entire regiment being called to duty daily. On the 9th of October, it was ordered to the Army of the James, and at the end of twenty days, during which it was employed on picket duty, it returned and proceeded to join the Army of the Potomac. With five other new Pennsylvania regiments, it formed a provisional brigade, commanded by General Hartranft, and was attached to the Ninth Corps. Early in December, this brigade moved to the relief of the Second and Fifth Corps, which were threatened with an attack by the enemy, while out upon a demonstration on the left. On the 15th of December, the six regiments composing this brigade, were organized into a division, which became the Third of the Ninth Corps, composed of two brigades, the Two Hundred and Fifth, Two Hundred and Seventh, and Two Hundred and Eleventh, forming the Second Brigade, to the command of which Colonel Mathews was assigned. General Hartranft commanded the division, and General Parke the corps. With the exception of occasional marches to the left, in support of aggressive movements, the regiment remained in camp, near Fort Prescott, on the Army Line Railroad during the winter, engaged in drill and fatigue duty, the division being held in reserve, just in rear of the other two divisions of the corps.

Before daylight, on the morning of the 25th of March, 1865, the regiment was summoned to arms, and ordered to stand in readiness to move upon the first signal, the enemy having broken through the line on Wilcox's front, and captured Fort Steadman. General Hartranft was quickly upon the ground where further disaster threatened, and gathering in the regiments of his division, attacked and checked the victorious onset of the enemy. The Two Hundred and Fifth was ordered to move down a ravine which ran in rear of the captured line, and when opposite Fort Haskell, was halted under cover, and held in support of the rest of the line, which was hotly engaged. For nearly an hour, impatient to move upon the defiant foe, it was forced to stand in waiting. Finally, when all his plans for a combined assault had been perfected, General Hartranft gave the signal to charge, and with a united front, and with the greatest determination and daring, the lines moved on, sweeping every thing before them, and re-gaining all that was lost. The Two Hundred and Fifth, moved at once to the support of the charging column, and held a large number of prisoners, small arms, and one battle-flag. The loss, fortunately, was but slight, being but ten wounded.

Of the part taken by the Two Hundred and Fifth, in the final assault upon the works before Petersburg, on the morning of the 2d of April, an idea will be best gained by the following extract from Captain Holmes' official report: "On the night of the 1st instant," he says, "at eleven o'clock, the regiment was ordered to form on the color line in front of the camp, Major Morrow in command. At one o'clock A. M., of the 2d, the regiment was moved towards, and on the Plank Road in rear of Fort Sedgwick, halted sometime, and then advanced by the right of the fort in the covered way, and formed in line of battle, with the Two Hundred and Seventh in front, directly in rear of our picket line. The order was given to charge the enemy's works at daylight, which was gallantly accomplished. The regiment captured Battery 30, with a number of prisoners; also one battle-flag fell into our hands, being captured by private John Lilly, of company F, who acted very gallantly throughout the engagement. This flag was forwarded to General Hartranft's headquarters, with a statement of its capture. Our colors were planted on the works, and remained there until the regiment was relieved. At this time, Major Morrow received a severe wound in the foot, and was taken off the field. I then assumed command, and remained with the regiment in the works, repulsing several charges made by the enemy during the day, and at night, assisted in placing the abatis in front of our works, under a severe enfilading fire from the enemy, remaining upon the line until two o'clock on the following morning, when I was ordered to move with the regiment to the rear of our picket line." In the advance upon the hostile works, and in driving out the enemy and holding the line when captured, the regiment was exposed to a fearful fire of infantry and artillery, from the effect of which it suffered heavy losses. Two officers, Lieutenants Henry A. Lower, and David B. Roberts, and twenty-two enlisted men were killed, six officers and ninety-one enlisted men were wounded, one officer, Samuel L. Hughes, mortally, and five men were missing, an aggregate loss of one hundred and twenty-six. Major Morrow lost a leg.

At daylight, the regiment was ordered to advance towards Petersburg; but everywhere the evidences of a general evacuation were observable, and on arriving within the city, it was found that the enemy had fired it in several places. By the aid of the fire companies, the flames were subdued, and the bridges crossing the Appomattox were saved. At noon the regiment returned to its former camp, and striking tents, started with the division to follow up the advantage. The progress to Burkesville Junction was slow, the command being charged with the repair of the the South Side Railroad as it went, and with keeping open this line of communication with the main body of the army. At Burkesville, the regiment remained until after the surrender of the rebel armies in the east, and hostile operations were at an end. It then proceeded via City Point to Alexandria, and encamped at Seminary Hill, where it remained until the 2d of June, when it was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND SIXTH REGIMENT.

THIS regiment was principally recruited in the counties of Indiana, Westmoreland, and Jefferson, and was organized at Camp Reynolds, near Pittsburg, on the 8th of September, 1864, with the following field officers: Hugh J. Brady, Colonel; John T. Fulton, Lieutenant Colonel; Joseph B. Ferguson, Major. The field, staff, and line officers, were for the most part veterans, and the majority of the men had served in other organizations. On the day following its organization, it was ordered to Washington, but while en route, an order was received directing it to proceed from Baltimore by transport, to City Point, where, upon its arrival, it was temporarily assigned to a provisional brigade in the Army of the James, occupying the Bermuda front, attached to the Eighteenth Corps. On the 4th of October, the regiment was ordered to duty with the engineer corps, and crossing to the north bank of the James, was put to work upon a fort a mile north of Dutch Gap. It was here under fire of the enemy's guns, and had one man killed, and several wounded. So promptly and well was this work executed, that a complimentary order was issued by the commander of the Department, commending the energy and skill displayed, and in recognition of the service, directing the work to be called Fort Brady.

On the 26th of October, the regiment was ordered to report to General Terry, in command of the Tenth Corps, and was assigned to the Third Brigade of the First Division, where it was associated with the Eleventh Maine, Twenty-fourth Massachusetts, Tenth Connecticut, and One Hundredth New York. It was soon after placed in comfortable winter-quarters, on the line of works north of Fort Harrison, where every facility was afforded for drill and discipline that could be desired. By an order of the War Department, of the 3d of December, the Tenth and Eighteenth corps were merged, the Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth corps being formed from them, the Twenty-fourth comprising all the white troops, and General Ord was placed in command of the Army of the James.

When the general movement of the army commenced on the 27th of March, 1865, the regiment was detached from the brigade, and ordered to remain in camp, reporting to General Devens, commanding the Third Division. This disposition was exceedingly distasteful to the command, and in response to a remonstrance made against it, the following communication from division headquarters was received: "I am directed by General Foster, to state that he regrets exceedingly, that your command should have been ordered to remain. The order came from Department Headquarters, and the General did all in his power to have it revoked, but could not." The convalescents of the First Division were ordered to report to Colonel Brady, who was directed to organize and hold them in readiness to move. On the 3d of April, the troops in front of Richmond were ordered to advance. It was soon discovered that the enemy had evacuated his works, and fired the city, so that the troops marched in without opposition. On the 22d, the regiment was relieved from General Devens' command, and ordered to report to General F. T. Dent, Military Governor, who assigned it to provost duty in the city. A month later, it returned to its brigade, Colonel Brady, as the ranking officer, assuming command. The regiment was soon after sent to Lynchburg, where it reported to General Gregg, and was, by him, assigned to provost duty in that town. It remained here for two weeks, and was then ordered to return to Richmond and re-join the division. On the 26th of June, no further service being required of it, it was mustered out of service, and ordered to Pittsburg, where, on the 2d of July, it was finally disbanded. In his farewell order, General Dandy, in command of the brigade, said: "Under your gallant commander, Colonel Hugh J. Brady, you were the first to enter Richmond, and to display in the capital of traitors, the Stars and Stripes of your country. Carry home with you, and bequeath it to your children, the red heart, the badge of the First Division. It is the symbol of deeds that will live when this present, and many succeeding generations, have passed away."

TWO HUNDRED AND SEVENTH REGIMENT.

COMPANIES A, D, H, K, and parts of B, E, and G of this regiment were recruited in Tioga county, C in Clinton, F in Cumberland and Franklin, I in Lycoming, and parts of B, E, and G in Bradford, York, and Lancaster. Recruiting was commenced about the middle of July, 1864, the companies rendezvousing at Camp Curtin, where, on the 8th of September, the regiment was organized with the following field officers: Robert C. Cox, who had served as Major of the One Hundred and Seventy-first Pennsylvania, Colonel; W. W. S. Snoddy, Lieutenant Colonel; Victor A. Elliott, Major. On the 12th, the regiment started for the front, and upon its arrival at City Point, was ordered to duty with the Army of the James. For four days it remained without shelter, awaiting orders. At the end of that time, it was directed to report to Colonel J. H. Potter's Brigade, and was assigned to picket duty on the Bermuda front, stretching from the Appomattox to the James. The picket lines were here in close proximity, at one point a rebel vidette standing at one end of a prostrate chestnut tree, and the Union at the other. In a ravine between the two lines, ran a cool, clear spring. Around this, soldiers occupying the out-posts of the two armies would gather, and for the time forgetting that they were enemies, would engage in the friendly conversation of comrades, and exchange papers for coffee and tobacco. On the 16th of November, this friendly spirit was suddenly broken, and at seven in the evening, the enemy charged upon the picket line. The regiment was ordered up to the support of the pickets, and a brisk engagement ensued, in which two were killed and a number wounded.

On the 24th of November, the regiment was transferred to the Ninth Corps, in the Army of the Potomac, and with that corps marched upon a demonstration upon the left, but did not become engaged. Upon its return to the Ninth Corps lines, then the extreme right, it went into camp upon the Army Line Railroad, near Fort Prescott, and was incorporated with the Third Division, composed of six Pennsylvania regiments, and commanded by General Hartman, forming with the Two Hundred and Fifth, and Two Hundred and Eleventh, the Second Brigade. On the 5th of February, 1865, the regiment joined in the movement to Hatcher's Run, the brigade being under the command of Colonel Cox. On reaching the run, it went into line of battle, heavy fighting at the time being in progress away to the left of the position occupied. At night orders were given to fortify. Substantial breast-works of logs and earth were thrown up, and the command held in momentary expectation of an attack. But none came, and after remaining in position four days, exposed to inclement weather, it returned to camp. Until the 25th of March, the routine of duty was little disturbed. At a little before daylight on the morning of that day, it was suddenly aroused by heavy firing upon the front. Soon after, orders were received to prepare for action and a rapid movement to the point of attack, Fort Steadman and portions of the line to right and left of it, having been assaulted and carried by the enemy. At six o'clock the order to move was received, and marching at double quick, and passing the Avery House, where was General Hartranft's headquarters, and where the pace was slackened to a quick step, proceeded down a ravine, just in rear of the line, until it had come to a point nearly opposite Fort Steadman, when it was halted and took shelter beneath the abrupt bank. The fire of infantry and artillery was incessant, but owing to the protection afforded by the position, little loss was here sustained. When the signal for the general advance by the whole division was given, at a little after eight, the regiment promptly responded; but scarcely had the movement begun, when the Colonel commanding the brigade ordered a halt. Four companies under Colonel Cox, not receiving the order, kept on at a run, and entered the fort with the advanced lines. The remaining companies, after a momentary pause, were again ordered forward, and entered the breast-works and redoubt to the left of Fort Steadman, taking many prisoners and one battle-flag. Emerging, as this regiment did, from cover, where the enemy had no suspicion that troops were concealed, and moving at a run, he had no time to bring his guns to bear upon it before it was upon him. The loss on this account was slight, being but one killed and sixteen wounded. The guns of the fort and batteries were again turned upon the enemy, and the breach was in a short time repaired. The regiment then returned to camp.

A little after three o'clock, on the morning of April 2d, the Two Hundred and Seventh was led out, and formed in line of battle, directly in front of Fort Sedgewick, the left of the regiment resting on the Jerusalem Plank Road, the other two regiments of the brigade being formed in its rear, and those of the First Brigade, as a reserve, just inside the picket line. Potter's Division was formed to the left of Hartranft's, and a portion of Wilcox's, which had been ordered to report to Hartranft, upon the right, a combined assault having been ordered upon a concerted signal, all along the lines. The enemy's artillery and mortar batteries were already in full play, the sky being ablaze with bursting shells and the fiery trails of the mortar missiles. Just at daybreak, a signal rocket was sent up from the centre of the line, and the order to advance was given. In the face of a murderous fire of grape and canister, and musketry at short range, Colonel Cox led his regiment, closely followed by the rest of the brigade, across the picket line, cleared the picket line of the enemy, paused a moment at the double line of chevaux-de-frise, where strong hands seized the obstructions which the pioneers were busy in breaking, and opening them like gates, rushed through, and with a wild shout carried the enemy's main line, planting the regimental colors upon the fort which commanded the Jerusalem Plank Road. Turning to the left, the brigade, for now the regiments had become mingled, rushed on and captured three other works with five pieces of artillery. The guns were immediately wheeled upon the enemy, and dispositions made to hold the line. Repeated attempts were made to re-take it, but each assault of the foe was repulsed with great slaughter. In speaking of the assault, Colonel Cox, in his official report, says: "Officers and men fell on every side. My Color Sergeant, George J. Horning, fell, pierced with seven balls, and three of the color-guard fell wounded by his side. Sergeant C. H. Ilgenfritz of company E, sprang forward and raised the colors, and my men rushed over the enemy's works, and planted the colors on their fort." Colonel Mathews, in command of the brigade, in his official report, says: "To Colonel R. C. Cox, who commanded the leading regiment, I owe the entire good success that attended the charge. Foremost among those who scaled the enemy's works, cheering his men by his courage, preparing them to meet the many charges of the enemy to re-take the lines, and thus beating them back each time, with heavy losses in killed and wounded, he is deserving of the highest praise." At ten o'clock A. M., Colonel Mathews, who, though suffering from illness, had remained at the fort, directing the movements, was relieved, and Colonel Cox succeeded to the command of the brigade. A very heavy fire was kept up on both sides, the enemy still holding an inner line, and one of his batteries away to the left, which still held out, and which partially enfiladed the position, greatly annoying the command. When the enemy's ammunition, found in the fort, was exhausted, squads from the regiment were sent back to Fort Sedgwick to bring up fresh supplies. The ground which they had to traverse, was commanded by the enemy's guns, and many were killed while crossing it; but enough was brought to keep the guns in play until four P. M., when the firing ceased. The entire loss in the engagement was thirty-seven killed, one hundred and forty wounded, and eight missing, an aggregate of one hundred and eighty-five. Captain James Carothers was among the killed, and Lieutenants Alonzo R. Case and Allen G. Dodd, among the mortally wounded. Ten officers were wounded.

At four o'clock on the morning of the 3d, the division was pushed forward into the city, but found it evacuated. After remaining about two hours, the regiment retraced its steps, crossed the lines, where, for upwards of nine months armed men had stood in deadly conflict, now silent and deserted, and returning to camp, made preparations to move in pursuit. The division was charged with keeping open the line of supply which was along the South Side Railroad. At Burkesville, the column halted, and the Two Hundred and Seventh was engaged in picket duty, and in taking charge of, and paroling rebel prisoners. Shortly after the surrender of Lee, it returned to City Point, and thence to Alexandria. It went into camp a short distance from the city, where it remained until the 13th of May, when the recruits were transferred to the Fifty-first Pennsylvania, and the rest of the regiment was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND EIGHTH REGIMENT.

THE original organizations of companies E, F, G, and I, were made from recruits from Perry county, A and D, from Snyder, B from Blair, C from Lebanon and Dauphin, and H, and K from Bedford. These companies rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, where they were filled to the maximum strength, and where a gimental organization was completed on the 12th of September, 1864, with the following field officers: Alfred B. M'Calmont, Colonel; M. T. Heintzelman, Lieutenant Colonel; Alexander Bobb, Major. Colonel M'Calmont had served as Colonel of the One Hundred and Forty-second regiment, and Lieutenant Colonel Heintzelmen in the Tenth, Seventy-sixth, and One Hundred and Seventy-second regiments. On the day following its organization, it started for the front, and upon its arrival, was assigned to duty in a provisional brigade, commanded by Colonel J. N. Potter, of the Twelfth New Hampshire, on the Bermuda Hundred front. It was here engaged in picket duty, fatigue duty in building roads, and in drill, until the 27th of November, when it was ordered to report to the Army of the Potomac. Soon after reaching the right bank of the Appomattox, it was put upon the march for the Weldon Railroad, but returned without meeting the enemy. It was assigned to the Ninth Corps, where it became part of the First Brigade, Third Division, and was associated with the Two Hundredth, and Two Hundred and Ninth regiments. The division was posted in rear of the Ninth Corps line, as a reserve, and was commanded by General Hartranft. The regiment was encamped to the right of the Avery House, the headquarters of General Hartranft, and nearly in the centre of the division. During the winter comparative quiet reigned, and though a terrible and almost ceaseless cannonade was kept up, none of the missiles reached the camps, except those of one gun, a sixty-four pounder, which was occasionally opened and was directed towards the Avery House. There was, however, little accuracy of aim, and they soon came to be regarded as harmless. Upon the occasion of the grand movement upon Hatcher's Run, in February, 1865, by the Second and Fifth corps, the division was sent to their support, and occupied a position on the line where the Union forces had been repulsed in a similar attempt to extend the line to the left, in the August previous. The ground was fortified, but the enemy did not attack, and after an absence of nearly a week, it returned to camp.

Upon the first signal of alarm, early on the morning of the 25th of March, when the Union lines were broken at Fort Steadman, and the fort and several batteries were captured, General Hartranft, who was quickly aroused, and ready for action, sent the Two Hundred and Eighth, which was nearest to his headquarters, under Lieutenant Colonel Heintzelman, in the absence of Colonel M'Calmont, and accompanied by Colonel Diven, in command of the brigade, to report to General M'Laughlin, having command of a brigade of the First Division upon the portion of the line captured. Moving hastily towards the scene of disaster, the regiment was brought into position on the right of General M'Laughlin's headquarters, the left resting within one hundred yards of Fort Haskell, and facing northward. A number of squads from the Third Brigade of the First Division, numbering some two hundred, chiefly from the One Hundredth Pennsylvania, were placed on the left of the Two Hundred and Eighth, making the line continuous to Fort Haskell. Upon coming into position, the enemy was discovered, having advanced upon the rear of the Union lines, and two or three well directed volleys were poured in upon him with good effect, causing him to fall back in some confusion, to the cover of a ravine. Encouraged by the advantage gained, a charge was immediately ordered, and he was driven from the ravine to the cover of Battery 12, and the line of works connecting the battery with Fort Haskell. The position thus gained, the regiment held without wavering, though the enemy kept up a steady fire upon it from a sheltered position. In the meantime, the Two Hundredth and Two Hundred and Ninth regiments, under General Hartranft, in person, had been brought up on the right of the break, and though encountering most determined opposition, had checked the rebel onset, and were holding him at bay, and the three regiments of the Second Brigade had been brought within close supporting distance. At this juncture, General Hartranft received an order from General Parke, in command of the corps, to re-take the lost lines, and his troops being in readiness, he gave the order to assault. Before Colonel Diven could reach Lieutenant Colonel Heintzelman with the order to advance, which he had received, the lines began to move forward. Eager to be with the foremost, without awaiting orders, Heintzelman gave the signal to advance, and in the most gallant manner, Battery 12, and the lines to the right and left of it were carried. In the folds of the battery, one hundred prisoners were taken, and along the line, two hundred and fifty more, including a Colonel, Adjutant, and several line officers. The men of the Two Hundred and Eighth were of hardy habits, and were skilled in the use of the rifle, and when ordered to fire, took deadly aim, sweeping all before them. Among rebel prisoners they had the reputation of being sharpshooters. At the moment when the final charge was made, Colonel Diven was struck by the fragment of a shell, and the command devolved on Lieutenant Colonel M'Call, of the Two Hundredth regiment. The loss was four killed and thirty-eight wounded. Captain Prosper Dalien and Lieutenant F. W. Keller, were among the mortally wounded. Captain Dalien was an officer of great merit, and was serving as acting engineer officer on the staff of General Hartranft. He was a native of France, educated at Nancy and at the military school at St. Cyr, had served through the Italian wars of 1859, as Lieutenant of Cavalry, and was brevetted Captain, and presented with two medals for gallant conduct at Solferino, by Napoleon III.

After the re-taking of the main line, the picket line was re-established, and Captain Shollar of company B, was detailed as brigade officer in charge. The enemy's dead were delivered under flag of truce, many of whom were found to have been shot in the head, and a large proportion were lying in front of the position occupied by the Two Hundred and Eighth. "When you were about to make your final charge," said a rebel officer to Captain Shollar, "a council of war was being held by our Generals; but it was the shortest council of war you ever saw; for when they beheld such magnificent lines advancing, they adjourned, by each taking to his heels without ceremony."

The attack had been so sudden, and the disaster was so appalling, that when the joyful tidings came, that Hartranft's single division, almost unaided, had successfully stemmed the current of disaster, and had triumphantly retrieved all that was lost, the feeling of exultation and gratitude knew no bounds. Especially was this feeling shared at army headquarters, and by the President, and Secretary of War. The following communication from General Parke, accompanying one from General Meade, touching the prompt promotion of General Hartranft to Major General, illustrates this feeling. "The commanding General instructs me to transmit herewith, a copy of communication from the commanding General of the Army of the Potomac, of yesterday's date, which will explain itself. He bids me say, however, in connection therewith, that such prompt recognition of your services on the 25th instant, by the President, Lieutenant General, and the Major General commanding this army, affords him the greatest pleasure, and he begs you will accept his hearty congratulations on your well deserved promotion." The letter of General Meade to General Parke, was in these words: "The commanding General directs me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of this date, recommending Brigadier General Hartranft, United States Volunteers, for the brevet of Major General of Volunteers, for his conspicuous gallantry in re-capturing Fort Steadman, during the action of the 25th instant, as well as for his industry in organizing and disciplining his division, composed of new regiments. In reply, I am directed to inform you, that before the receipt of your letter, a recommendation of this same effect had been made by the commanding General, to Lieutenant General Grant, to which a response was received, that this nomination had been made to the Secretary of War, and a telegraphic answer returned, 'the appointment shall be made.' Since then, the commanding General has been informed by telegraph, that Brigadier General Hartranft is brevetted Major General, and that the appointment has been forwarded by mail. Your recommendation is, however, forwarded, to complete the record."

When affairs had become settled upon the lately broken and disordered front, the regiment was relieved from duty, and returned to its quarters. The night of the 26th, was the last spent in camp. After that, it was kept in motion until daylight on the morning of the 2d of April, when it joined in the attack upon the rebel works in front of Fort Sedgwick. It was of the assaulting column, and with unflinching determination, moved over the ground, where the enemy's missiles, from small arms and powerful batteries, dealt death and destruction on every hand. His strong works were carried, and his guns, which had for many months belched forth their fiery flame upon the Union lines, were turned upon his retreating troops. At an inner line he made a stand, and during the long day he kept up a desperate fire, and made determined struggles to re-gain his lost ground. In one of these assaults, he succeeded in carrying a portion of the line held by detachments sent to the help of the division and posted upon the left of the regiment; with great bravery it resisted the attack, and though suffering from an enfilading fire, held the position until relief came, and the abandoned ground was re-taken. At night the fire began to slacken, and pickets were thrown upon the front, Lieutenant Colonel Heintzelman being division officer. At a little before daylight, General

Hartranft ordered him to advance and feel the enemy. Cautiously the pickets moved forward, but they found the works abandoned. The columns were speedily put in motion, and on entering Petersburg, it was found that the enemy had escaped across the Appomattox, and was flying southward. After remaining until noon, the regiment returned to camp, and made preparations to join in the pursuit. The loss in this engagement was nine killed and thirty-nine wounded. The regiment moved with the division upon the line of the South Side Railroad to Nottoway Court House, which it reached on the 9th, where the news of the surrender of Lee was received. Here it remained until the 20th, when returning via Petersburg to City Point, it proceeded to Alexandria, and encamped near the seminary, and subsequently south of the town. The men now became exceedingly impatient to return home, many of them being farmers, and seed-time rapidly passing. But not until the first of June, were arrangements perfected for their release. On that day, the recruits were transferred to the Fifty-first Pennsylvania, and the rest of the regiment was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND NINTH REGIMENT.

COMPANIES A, and F of this regiment, were from Cumberland county, B, and I from York, C from Cambria, D from Franklin, E from Columbia, G from Adams, H from Lehigh, and K from Lebanon. The regiment was organized at Camp Curtin, on the 16th of September, 1864, by the choice of the following field officers: Tobias B. Kauffman, formerly Major of the First Reserve Regiment, Colonel; George W. Frederick, Lieutenant Colonel; John L. Ritchey, Major. A considerable number of officers and men had served in other organizations, the experience thereby gained proving of great advantage in disciplining the raw recruits. Immediately after its organization, it moved for the front, and passing up the James River, landed at Bermuda Hundred. It was placed in camp at Camp Potter, where it remained two weeks, and was then posted upon the advanced line to the left of Fort Harrison, midway between the James and Appomattox rivers. Soon after taking position, Captain John B. Landis, with three Lieutenants and one hundred and thirteen men, was detached from the regiment, and assigned to duty in garrisoning re-doubt Carpenter, on the left bank of the James. Company and battalion drill was here prosecuted with what success it was possible, with a large proportion of the command almost constantly on exhausting duty on picket and in garrison, and by great diligence and efficiency on the part of its officers, it attained a good degree of discipline. During the engagement at Chapin's Farm, or Fort Harrison, the regiment was ordered upon the parapet, creating the impression upon the enemy, that a charge upon his flank was about to be delivered. The real charge upon the front was heroically made, and the fort was captured.

On the night of the 17th of November, the enemy made an attack upon the picket line in considerable force. Colonel Kauffman, who was division officer of the day, Captain Henry Lee, and Lieutenant Thomas J. Hendricks, with nineteen men, fell into the enemy's hands, and were held as prisoners, until near the close of the war. The troops upon the main line were ordered out, and the attack was handsomely repulsed. In addition to the loss by capture, one man was killed and two were wounded. On the 24th, the regiment was transferred, with other Pennsylvania regiments with which it had been brigaded, from the Army of the James, to the army of the Potomac. It was assigned to duty with the Ninth Corps, and was soon after brigaded with the Two Hundredth, and Two Hundred and Eighth Pennsylvania regiments, forming the First Brigade, Colonel Charles W. Diven commanding, of the Third Division. The regiment was encamped on the commanding ground near Meade Station, the division, which was in command of General Hartranft, being posted as a reserve to the other two divisions. During the winter, the regiment was engaged in drill, in fatigue duty upon fortifications, and in the construction of roads, and was out upon occasional demonstrations upon the left.

At a little before daylight, on the morning of the 25th of March, 1865, the regiment was aroused by rapid and heavy firing in its front, and it was soon apparent that the lines, which were held by General Wilcox's Division, had been broken, and Fort Steadman, which was in its immediate front, and which, by daylight, was in full view, had been captured. General Wilcox, whose directions, in case of an emergency, the regiment was instructed to obey, had ordered it under arms, and in motion for the protection of his threatened rear. At this juncture, General Hartranft appeared on the ground, and assumed personal supervision of his command. While the Two Hundred and Eighth was moving up on the extreme left of the break, and Hartranft personally was moving with the Two Hundredth upon the right front, the Two Hundred and Ninth was sent down a ravine, where it was under partial shelter, to come in upon the right, where it was joined by two skeleton regiments from Michigan, the Second and Seventeenth. "I had scarcely got my regiment in position," says Lieutenant Colonel Frederick, in his official report, "when the same aid informed me that it was General Hartranft's order, that I should immediately, with the Two Hundredth Pennsylvania, charge the hill in my front, which was then held by the enemy. I at once gave the order to charge, and the regiment moved forward under a very heavy fire of musketry and artillery, gaining a line of works running across the open field, over which we were advancing. Halting for a moment, we again advanced, gaining a ditch near the hill occupied by the enemy. Here we were shelled from both front and rear. It was here also, that the gallant Lieutenant Hugh Jones, commanding company C, fell, pierced through the head by a musket ball. We remained in the ditch some time, when, noticing the enemy retreating, we poured into them a murderous fire, which was continued until I saw the Two Hundredth, which was on my left, preparing, as I supposed, to charge. I immediately ordered my regiment to charge likewise, and forward we went, not an officer nor a man halting, or faltering, until our advanced line was gained, and our colors were planted on the works. I am satisfied that they were the first colors planted on the works. My officers and men all did their duty so well, that it would seem invidious to make any distinctions. Yet, I feel it my duty to make honorable mention of Sergeants Stiles and Humphreys, color-bearers, who were always to be seen in the advance. A considerable number of prisoners were sent to the rear, estimated at three hundred and fifty." The loss in the engagement, was five killed and fifty wounded. In a general order issued after the battle, General Parke, who commanded the Ninth Corps, says: "The Major General commanding, congratulates the corps on this auspicious result. It will be a source of pride to him and them, that so heavy and desperate an attack upon their lines, was repelled by them before the arrival of the supports promptly and cordially furnished from the other corps. The gallantry and steadiness of the troops engaged, which so brilliantly retrieved a momentary disaster, and converted it into a victory, merit and receive his warmest commendation and gratitude."

Preparations were made for a determined assault on the enemy's works, by the division, at daylight on the morning of the 2d of April. Lieutenant Colonel M'Call, who commanded the brigade, massed his force, by order of General Hart rauff, near the Avery House, at one A. M. Two hours later, he led it to the front of Fort Sedgwick, and formed it in column of regiments, just inside the picket line, as a reserve to the Second Brigade, which was formed in a similar manner outside. At four o'clock, the signal to advance was given, and the regiment moved at double quick, following closely the column. At the picket line there was a momentary check, occasioned by meeting numbers who came running back, and reporting a repulse. These were quickly rallied, and the command again went forward. As it came upon the open space in front of the rebel works, it was exposed to a fearful fire of infantry and artillery; but without faltering, it pressed forward and gained the hostile front, capturing many prisoners, and turning the guns of the fort and batteries upon the enemy. In common with the division, it succeeded in holding the captured line, though hard pressed by the rebels, nettled at their loss. At night, the firing gradually died away, and a heavy picket line was thrown out, the enemy's chevaux-de-frise being moved to the opposite side of his works. The command was early astir, and at daylight, the pickets cautiously advanced. They soon found that the enemy had gone, and when the columns, which were immediately put in motion, reached the city of Petersburg, they found that also abandoned. The Two Hundred and Ninth was sent to the left, to communicate with troops of the Sixth Corps. After remaining in and about the city until noon, the regiment returned to camp. The loss in the engagement was seven killed and fifty-two wounded. Captain James P. McCullough, was among the killed, Major Ritchey, and Lieutenants Henry A. Bigler, and Baltzer Shugar, among the wounded. The division was now ordered to take charge of the army trains, and moved with them along the South Side Railroad, repairing the track as it went, until it reached Nottoway Court House, where it was halted, and where the regiment remained until the 20th, the rebel army having surrendered on the 9th. From here it returned to City Point, and thence to Alexandria, where it went into camp, and was held until the 31st of May, when the recruits were transferred to the Fifty-first Pennsylvania, and the rest of the regiment was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND TENTH REGIMENT.

THE troops composing this regiment, recruited in the counties of Dauphin, Columbia, Schuylkill, Potter, Mifflin, Bradford, Franklin, and Centre, rendezvoused at Camp Curtin, and on the 24th of September, were organized by the selection of the following field officers: William Sergeant, Colonel; Edward L. Witman, Lieutenant Colonel; Henry E. Munson, Major. Colonel Sergeant had served as Captain in the Twelfth United States Infantry, Lieutenant Colonel Witman, as Captain in the Forty-sixth Pennsylvania regiment, and the majority of both officers and men had had experience in military duty. Soon after its organization, it was ordered to join the Army of the Potomac, before Petersburg, and was assigned to the Third Brigade, Second Division of the Fifth Corps, where it was associated with the Third and Fourth Delaware, and the remnants of the One Hundred and Ninetieth and One Hundred and Ninety-first Pennsylvania, commanded by General Gwyn. On the 27th and 28th of October, it was engaged for the first time, at Hatcher's Run, but suffered only small loss. On the 5th of December, it moved with the corps on the Bellefield raid, which lasted for nearly a week, the column destroying the Weldon Railroad as it went, together with station houses, and the stores of the rebel government. The rails were heated, and bent in many fantastic shapes, some of them being twisted into the form of a Maltese Cross, as a certificate of the fact, that it was done by the Fifth Corps. The weather was intensely cold while upon this march, and the troops suffered much, causing many to fall out of the ranks, some of whom were captured and inhumanly murdered. After the return of the column, much sickness prevailed in the regiment, occasioned by the fatigue and exposure to which the troops were subjected, and many died, among them the Chaplain, Reverend Taylor D. Swartz. In the action near Dabney's Mills, on the 5th and 6th days of February, 1865, the regiment displayed great gallantry, Colonel Sergeant leading with his characteristic heroism and disregard of danger, sustaining considerable losses in killed, wounded, and missing.

On the 27th of March, the movement upon Gravelly Run commenced, the Two Hundred and Tenth taking the advance, and during the fierce actions of the three days which succeeded, it was at the fore front, displaying a stubborn bravery, which was unsurpassed, and sustaining losses which unmistakably show the fiery struggle through which it was called to pass. Colonel Sergeant was mortally wounded while gallantly leading his command. Adjutant Morris Schlesinger, a scarred veteran, and Captain John N. Hughes, were also mortally wounded. Schlesinger, when found upon the battle-field, weakened by his wounds, exclaimed, "this is the death I have sought." Captain A. T. Kinney was wounded in the throat, and so mangled that he was never after able to speak in an audible tone. Lieutenants William M. Colwell, and John Harding, were also among the wounded. Captain John Cook, and Lieutenant Hosea Hudson, were wounded and taken prisoners. The entire loss was thirty-five killed, one hundred and fifteen wounded, and one hundred and fifty missing. The command now devolved upon Lieutenant Colonel Witman, who was subsequently commissioned Colonel, and under him, the regiment participated in the fierce fighting of the 1st of April, taking flags, small arms, and prisoners. In a charge made upon the enemy's works, it displayed its wonted courage, sustaining heavy losses in killed and wounded. With the corps, it followed closely the retreating army, and at Appomattox Court House, was upon the front line to the last, the flag of truce proclaiming the surrender, passing through the lines of the brigade in which it stood. After the rebel army laid down its arms, it returned to the neighborhood of Washington, and after participating in the grand review of the National troops, was mustered out of service on the 30th of May. The recruits were transferred to the Fifty-first regiment, with which they served until the 27th of July, when they were also mustered out.

TWO HUNDRED AND ELEVENTH REGIMENT.

COMPANY A of this regiment, was recruited in Crawford county, B in Jefferson, C in McKean and Jefferson, D in Mercer, F in Erie, G in Warren, and E, H, I, and K in Westmoreland. The companies rendezvoused at Camp Reynolds, near Pittsburg, where, on the 16th of September, 1864, a regimental organization was effected with the following field officers: James H. Trimble, Colonel; Levi A. Dodd, Lieutenant Colonel; Augustus A. Mechling, Major. Soon after its organization, it moved for the front, and on the 20th, was placed in the intrenchments at Bermuda Hundred, where it was incorporated with a provisional brigade in the Army of the James. It had scarcely reached its position, when it was ordered to mount the parapets, in full view of, and in point blank range of the enemy's guns. The sudden appearance of the long lines of men upon the sand-bags, of which the works were constructed, attracted his attention, and he immediately opened upon them with his batteries. Two men of company F, were instantly killed by a single shell. The object of thus exposing the command, was to divert attention from the storming party which was about to move upon Fort Harrison, and which gallantly carried that work. The picket line, which the regiment was required to hold, extended from the James River on the right, opposite Dutch Gap, through a dense pine wood to an open space, where was the regimental encampment. This space, a fourth of a mile in width, had been cleared of timber, by converting it into an impenetrable slashing, over which an unobstructed view of the enemy was given. The line after leaving the river was nearly straight until it reached this slashing, where it made an abrupt bend, leaving the apex of the angle close to the enemy's line. At this point, many rebel deserters came in to the Union lines. So common had this practice become, that it was proving a serious drain upon the rebel strength; so much so, that General Pickett, who was in command, determined to stop it. The most friendly relations had subsisted between the opposing picket lines, the men frequently meeting for social conference and banter. But on the night of the 17th of November, quietly massing a picked body of men, the rebel leader suddenly burst upon the Union pickets, and before they could rally, or supports could come to their aid, captured fifty-four of their number, seized this projecting angle, and before morning, had built a redoubt, and so strengthened his lines, that General Grant, after a careful survey of the ground, deemed it inexpedient to attempt to retake it. This was the end of the truce on the part of the pickets, hostilities never ceasing afterwards for an instant, and so long as the regiment remained on that line, the men were obliged to hug the breast-works, or lie close in the bomb-proofs.

On the 27th of November, the Two Hundred and Eleventh, with other Pennsylvania regiments with which it had been brigaded, was relieved by a brigade of colored troops, and was ordered to join the Army of the Potomac, on the south side of the Appomattox. These regiments were subsequently organized into a division, which became the Third of the Ninth Corps, to the command of which General Hartranft was assigned, the Two Hundred and Eleventh, Two Hundred and Fifth, and Two Hundred and Seventh, under command of Colonel Mathews, forming the Second Brigade. During the winter, the regiment was thoroughly drilled, and made occasional expeditions with the troops of other corps, but without becoming engaged, though a considerable amount of fortifying was done in the movement upon Hatcher's Run, and the troops were there held in momentary expectation of bloody work.

Before the opening of the spring campaign, Colonel Trimble resigned, and was succeeded by Lieutenant Colonel Dodd. The camp of the regiment was located midway between Fort Howard and Fort Alexander Hayes, on the Army Line Railroad, to the extreme left of the division, which was posted in rear of, and acted as a support to the Ninth Corps line. At the moment when this line was broken at Fort Steadman, at early dawn, on the morning of the 25th of March, 1865, and the fort and a considerable portion of the line was captured, the Two Hundred and Eleventh was resting in its camp, nearly four miles away. The Colonel and Major were absent, and the Lieutenant Colonel was sick in hospital. The command consequently devolved on Captain William A. Coulter. It was quickly summoned to the scene of disaster, and marching rapidly, reached division headquarters at half-past six A. M. With little delay it was led by order of General Hartranft, to the high open ground about Meade Station, just in rear of Fort Steadman, where it was formed and awaited the order to charge. The other regiments of the division, which were all nearer the scene of disaster than this, had been gathered in, and having checked the enemy's advance, were holding him at bay. A strong line had been drawn around the fatal break, and the best possible disposition of the division for strength and efficiency, had been made. General Hartranft felt satisfied that the enemy could make no further advance, and that by a united assault, his division could re-take the captured works. His plan of attack was most ingenious. He already had five of his regiments posted in the immediate front, advantageously formed for a dash upon the enemy, who was swarming upon the fort, the covered ways, and bomb-proofs. The Two Hundred and Eleventh was a mile away, but on high open ground. It was a large regiment, and if put in motion, drawn out in line, would instantly attract the attention of the foe, and, as he believed, would draw the fire of his artillery upon it. His other regiments thus relieved from peril, could rush upon, and overpower him. He accordingly sent word to their commanders to hold themselves in readiness to charge in fifteen minutes, and the signal to start, should be the forward movement of the Two Hundred and Eleventh, which was in full view of them all. General Hartranft determined to lead this regiment in person, and though he expected that it would be sacrificed by the fire which the enemy could instantly bring to bear upon it, he was ready to share its peril, in order that his division might be victorious. The regiment was accordingly formed, with nearly six hundred muskets in line, and put in motion. In the most perfect order, and in the most gallant manner, it moved forward; but contrary to the expectation of General Hartranft, the enemy, at sight of the advance of so fine a body of men, instead of turning all his guns upon it, as was in his power to do, began to waver, and when the combined forces of the division rushed on with unflinching determination, he had little heart to offer opposition, and the fort, guns, small arms, and many prisoners were speedily taken. At the moment when all the plans had been perfected, and the columns were upon the point of moving, General Hartranft received an order from General Parke, in command of the corps, not to attempt to re-take the fort, until reinforcements from the Sixth Corps, which were on their way to his support, should arrive. But the order to move had already gone forth, and it could not be safely re-called. He accordingly decided that it was better to disregard, than to obey orders, and when the moment came, dashed forward with his men, winning a brilliant and most signal victory. The captures made by the division, were fully shared by the regiment. Fortunately, the loss was but slight, being one killed and ten wounded.

Great activity all along the Union lines was soon after inaugurated, and on the night of the 30th, preparations were made by the division to assault. It was, however, deferred until the morning of the 2d of April. At a little before midnight of the 1st, the regiment moved to the camp of the Two Hundred and Seventh, where it remained until half-past three of the following morning. It then moved to the front, passing around the right of Fort Sedgwick, and was formed with the brigade, in column by regiments, the left resting on the Jerusalem Plank Road, the First Brigade standing in like formation, just in its rear. A strong force of pioneers was detailed from the leading brigade, well provided with axes and spades, all under command of Lieutenant Albert Alexander, of the Two Hundred and Eleventh, to open the way for the movement of the column. When all was in readiness, the word to advance was given. The pioneers, closely followed by the division in close column, and joined on right and left by other troops of the corps, went forward, and in an instant the heavy blows of the axe-men upon the well adjusted abatis and chevaux-de-frise, were heard. The work of destruction was scarcely begun, when a fearful discharge of grape and canister was brought to bear upon them, before which the stoutest might well quail. But closing up where their ranks were swept away, they soon broke the obstructions, and, assisted by the ready hands of the troops which followed, had ample opening for the advance of the column. With a rush, the ground in front of the rebel works was cleared, and pushing up the steep and slippery sides of the forts, the troops were soon in complete possession, the enemy either captives or in full retreat, and the rebel main line of works, from a short distance beyond the Jerusalem Plank Road on the left, to a point four hundred yards to its right, was triumphantly carried and held by the division. The guns were immediately turned upon the foe, and with his own ammunition, death and destruction was dealt upon him. Not without a fierce struggle was the ground held, for the enemy, intent on re-gaining his lost ground, made repeated charges. But hastily throwing up lunets, for the protection of the gunners, and rifle-pits for the infantry, the division succeeded in repulsing every assault. But this signal victory was not gained without signal loss. Of the Two Hundred and Eleventh, four officers and seventeen enlisted men were killed, four officers and eighty-nine men wounded, and twenty-one missing, an aggregate of one hundred and thirty-five. Lieutenant Colonel Charles McLain, and Lieutenants Andrew J. Sparks, Albert Alexander, and John P. Tarr, were killed, and Major Elias B. Lee, and Lieutenant John M. Pelton, mortally wounded. Captain James D. Gourlay, and Lieutenant Thomas C. Gilson, were severely wounded. Few more desperate assaults, and none more successful, were delivered during the war, than this.

During the following night, the enemy quietly withdrew from the front, and evacuating the city under cover of darkness, retreated rapidly. The division entered on the following morning, with little opposition. The Two Hundred and Eleventh was immediately ordered forward to the Appomattox, to picket the river bank. The railroad bridge and foot bridge, were both found on fire. By vigorous efforts the former was saved, and part of the latter. Towards noon, the regiment marched back to camp. The remainder of its history is quickly told, for hostile operations were now at an end. It followed along the South Side Railroad, in charge of trains, until it reached Nottoway Court House, where news of the surrender of Lee was received, and where it remained until the 20th, and then proceeded via City Point to Alexandria. Here it encamped, and here, on the 2d of June, it was mustered out of service.

TWO HUNDRED AND TWELFTH SIXTH ARTILLERY.

THE number of troops recruited for the Fifth Artillery, Two Hundred and Fourth of the line, being largely in excess of the standard for a single regiment, it was determined to organize a Sixth for similar duty. The men composing the latter, were principally from the counties of Allegheny, Butler, Westmoreland, Fayette, Washington, and Lawrence, and were organized at Camp Reynolds, near Pittsburg, on the 15th of September, 1864, with the following field officers: Charles Barnes, Colonel; Joseph B. Copeland, Lieutenant Colonel; Robert H. Long, Joseph R. Kemp, and Frank H. White, Majors. Two days after its organization, it moved for Washington, and upon its arrival, was assigned to the Second Brigade of DeRussy's Division, which was garrisoning the defenses of the Capital. On the 29th, the regiment was detached from the division, and ordered to duty in guarding the portion of the Orange and Alexandria Railroad, lying between Alexandria and Manassas, the several companies being stationed at intervals along the line, with headquarters at Fairfax Court House. Over this road, supplies for Sheridan's army were transported, and the regiment was charged with keeping open the part intrusted to it. It was an enemy's country, and infested by roving bands, military or civil upon occasion, and to guard against surprise, and to be at all points superior to an attacking force, required incessant watchfulness and skill in the disposition and handling of the guards. Colonel Barnes was an experienced infantry officer, having served in the Ninth Reserve, and nearly all of both officers and men had been previously in the army. The discipline which had thus been acquired, now served a most important purpose; for it was only by the strictest attention to duty, and the exercise of sound discretion, that the wily and watchful enemy could be kept at bay. To go outside the lines, was almost certain death. On one occasion, three soldiers who had chanced thus to go, were fired upon by parties in ambush, and wounded, when, rushing up from their covert, the inhuman wretches stood, with pistols in hand, over the bodies of the victims weltering in their blood, and fired into their breasts until they were quite dead.

About the middle of November—Sheridan having, in the meantime, cleared the Shenandoah Valley of the foe—this line of railway was abandoned, and the regiment was ordered back to the defenses of Washington, being posted at Forts Marcy, Ward, Craig, Reno, Albany, Lyon, and others. Previous to this time, it had been armed and drilled as infantry. It was now instructed in heavy artillery service. Captain Gustavus L. Braun, who had served as an officer in the Second Artillery regiment, was appointed drill master, and under the strict discipline enforced by its Colonel, it soon became proficient likewise in this arm of the service. During the winter, and until a period was put to the war by the victorious armies of Grant and Sherman, it remained on duty in the forts covering the Capital. On the 13th of June, 1865, it was mustered out of service at Fort Ethan Allen, and returning to Camp Reynolds, was, on the 17th, finally disbanded. Subsequently, Colonel Barnes, "for meritorious conduct during the entire war," was brevetted a Brigadier General.
